

While I don't have access to traffic and weather information in Atlanta yet, I have been looking forward to it with eager anticipation. As a service technician, I travel the metropolitan roads each workday, and have to monitor traffic reports on the local radio stations constantly, to avoid delays.

Many times, when a traffic report was finally broadcast, I was already in a position that prohibited me from avoiding the traffic problem.

Most local stations concentrate on traffic reports during rush hours. As I travel frequently during the day, the scant updates on local radio stations don't serve me well.

I anticipate receiving XM Radio traffic reports to be able to quickly gain information on immediate conditions. Once I am assured that road conditions are favorable, I would switch back to my favorite local station for local content.

I mostly listen to local talk radio stations.
